I was browsing SO and noticed there were quite a few unanswered questions with interesting titles. For example the following question: Why do people still use Internet Explorer? Why? (this is my own answer) A: Those questions are interesting to the community. You see, we often have problems. There are bugs in software, bugs in hardware, people don't know how to add things to their HTML,... There are sometimes just things that aren't known. Questions like this make us collectively happy that someone knows the answer. They are interesting to the community because they make us feel good about ourselves for knowing what we know. We also learn. If someone knows the answer, they teach us. Hopefully, they'll take a few minutes to explain to us how to fix it, or to point to a useful link.
