students are rarely provided with opportunities to develop their basic medical ethics. The aims of the present study are: (1) to assess the acceptance and feasibility of a model simulation in teaching basic medical ethics for students in a medical university in Saudi Arabia; and (2) to identify the most effective ways to improve this model simulation. Data were gathered from a pre- and post-test questionnaire using a questionnaire regarding students' evaluation of a simulation in teaching basic medical ethics. The data were gathered from medical students. The main outcome measures included pretest and post-test percentage correct responses and students' evaluation of the simulation. A model simulation in teaching medical ethics is acceptable and feasible for medical students. Students' evaluation of the simulation were divorced and Rudolf lived with his mother. He attended a primary school in Munich and then attended the Luitpold Gymnasium, a high school in Bavaria. At the age of 19, he married a charming twenty-four year old named Ilse Marie Volkmeinig from Hanover. She died giving birth to a son, while Rudolf was interned by the Allies at The Isle of Man as a member of the Wolf's Lair (a building at Rastenburg) in 1943. Rudolf received treatment for his wounds in a hospital in East Grinstead in Sussex. He left the hospital and surrendered to the British authorities in May 1945, being arrested by the British and taken to Surrey, England. He was convicted of treason, sentenced to life imprisonment and then released in 1955 after serving nine years of a fifteen-year sentence. Rudolf became a naturalized Englishman and
