The development of new molecular techniques and the application of high-throughput technologies have enabled a shift towards high-throughput analysis of variants within a single gene or a panel of genes. The availability of huge data sets containing information on variants permits the application of statistical approaches for the detection of the causative mutations in many complex human diseases. Here, we present a fast and efficient machine-learning based approach to identify mutations responsible for inherited diseases, illustrated by the detection of known and unknown PON1 polymorphisms. The approach is based on a Naïve Bayes (NB) classifier that uses all descriptors available for a given gene, such as sequence length, codon number, amino acid composition, and corresponding physicochemical properties. The same strategy is used to detect mutations that were found to cause the disease in PON1, thereby demonstrating that the proposed approach can be used as a tool to support the diagnosis of complex diseases.Posts by This Author The New York Times reports that Donald Trump's presidential campaign chairman, Paul Manafort, has offered to testify against his former boss, and that special counsel Robert Mueller's team has contacted the White House regarding the offer. This isn't very good for Trump. It's a sign that Mueller's team is building the case against Trump. Mueller and his team spent nearly two years investigating Russian efforts to interfere in the 2016 election. They focused on three events. The first was an infamous June 9, 2016, meeting in Trump Tower that Donald Trump Jr. 3e33713323
